The protection of confidential, sensitive and proprietary business information and trade secrets is vital to the interests and the success of INS. Many of our employees need access to confidential company and customer information and records in order to do their jobs. While an open climate of information sharing is most often desirable, there is a need to safeguard the security of information that could be detrimental to the company or our customers and information that could be advantageous to our competitors. - Computer programs and code
- Electronic data (files/programs)
- Personnel and compensation data
- Customer and mailing lists
- Financial reports or data*

Employees who improperly use or disclose trade secrets, confidential business information or information concerning a customer will be subject to disciplinary action, up to and including termination of employment, even if they do not actually benefit from the disclosed information. Such employees may also be subject to legal action.

* Employees in Finance and Customer Care with access to customer's personal financial data are required to adhere to Red Flag Rules. A separate document outlining these regulations titled Red Flag Rules is located on the Lawson Portal.

CPNI Rules

In 1999, the Federal Communications Commission (FCC) enacted rules protecting the personal customer information collected by local, long distance and wireless phone companies. The personal customer information includes phone numbers dialed by a customer, time calls are made, and the different services used by a customer. This type of personal information is referred to as Customer Proprietary Network Information (CPNI). Because of the CPNI rules, the FCC is empowered to investigate consumer complaints about unauthorized or unlawful disclosure of customer information, and can issue citations and propose fines.

Per the FCC rules, a phone company such as INS can release CPNI information only under the following circumstances:

- Over the Phone - If the customer calls into INS we can:
 - Mail the requested information to the address of record listed on the account,
 - Return the call to the phone number of record on the account to relay the requested information,
 - Or, if the customer is able to provide unprompted call detail information to you during a customer initiated call without your assistance, then you are permitted to discuss the call detail information provided by the customer.
- In Person - If the customer appears at your location and shows a valid photo ID that corroborates with your customer account information, you may disclose CPNI.

The only exception to the delivery of information to account holders is the category of businesses that have dedicated account reps. If they call in through their account rep, we can release the information on the call without a call back. If the business does not have an account rep, they will be treated as a consumer and all procedures above apply.

Access to INS CPNI information will be password protected and only available to those employees who need it for the completion of their job duties.

Disciplinary action for misuse of CPNI will be in accordance with company policy as stated in the INS Employee Manual.

Education

On an annual basis, INS will inform all employees of the rules and circumstances for disseminating CPNI. CPNI will also be discussed with new staff during new employee orientation.

INS employees requiring access to CPNI data to fulfill job responsibilities will be provided initial and ongoing training on the proper access and usage of personal customer information. These individuals will also be trained on their responsibilities in protecting CPNI.

INS does not use CPNI for sales or marketing purposes.

INS does not disclose CPNI data outside the company except when required by a lawful subpoena, for purposes of billing and collection, or when necessary to protect the rights or property of the company or its customers.
